Black History Month: Representation and what it means to you

Black History Month: Representation and what it means to you

One of the main focuses of Black History Month is to celebrate Black heroes and pioneers who set trends and broke boundaries throughout history. In other words, highlighting role models and people to look up to. Given this, what does representation mean to you? How important is it for you to see people who look like you being successful? And how does this impact how you think about what you are capable of, if at all?
